

QUOTATION

CHARLES DUCLOS ON THE ACQUISITION OF BEHAVIOR

... he will then feel a kind of satisfaction which will make a second action less difficult; soon, he will feel impelled to a third and, in little time, it will constitute his character. One acquires conviction by repetitive acts. (chap. IV, p. 239)

Their acts determine their opinions more than their opinions govern their actions. (chap. V, p. 258)

From: Duclos, C. (1970). Considerations sur les moeurs de ce siecle. Lausanne: Rencontre. (Original work published 1751)

Contributed by M. W. G. Garthwaite, 7, r. des Princes, Monaco MC98000, who also provided the translations.